Novel interprosthetic nail for the treatment of a fractured femoral implant in revision total hip arthroplasty. The primary aim of this study was to investigate the ability of a novel interprosthetic nail to treat a fracture of a femoral implant in a patient with previously failed hip replacement and to determine whether the femoral fracture in this scenario is a factor requiring a larger diameter interprosthetic nail. A total hip replacement was performed and the patient returned 18 months later with a fracture of the femoral stem. A femoral fracture is a rare complication in revision arthroplasty but is thought to be due to excessive bone stock removal at the time of primary surgery. To our knowledge, this is the first report of a femoral fracture occurring at revision total hip arthroplasty. The present invention relates to product packaging in general and more specifically to cartons and wrappers in general. Increasing attention is being directed to the packaging of products made from synthetic resins, particularly in view of the aesthetic qualities of such packaging, but also for reasons of economy, ease of manufacture and safety, especially when the product is intended to be consumed or used by small children. The resultant product packages are known in a wide variety of configurations and designs
