Since substituted phenoxy ethers are important as starting materials in the preparation of medicinals or intermediates for preparing said medicinals, it has been desired to develop a process which is efficient in the preparation of a substituted phenoxy ether in an industrially advantageous manner. It is known that phenoxy ethers are readily prepared by a halogenation reaction of an aryl alcohol with a haloalkyl nitrite in the presence of a catalyst and a solvent such as ether, acetone or dioxane as described in Japanese Patent Publication No. 11599/69 and Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 623/74. However, it has been desired to develop a process which can prepare a substituted phenoxy ether in an industrially advantageous manner. For example, it is difficult to control the degree of substitution of a phenoxy ether which can be prepared by the conventional processes since the reaction proceeds under simple conditions. The conventional processes also require troublesome separation procedures. In addition, the yields of the reaction are not so high in the conventional processes.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to power generation and, more particularly, to a power converter with a voltage mode control circuit and a method of operating the power converter.

2. Background of the Related Art A power converter may be a device that converts energy from one form to another. The power converter may include a power supply, a voltage mode control circuit, and an output circuit. The voltage mode control circuit may receive a direct current (DC) voltage and generate a voltage mode control signal to be transferred to the output circuit. The power converter may have a power supply that generates a stable DC voltage from a supply voltage, such as a battery, a power line, or any other
