The long-term objective of this proposal is to evaluate the therapeutic and preventive potential of interferon-beta (IFN-beta) and the combination of IFN-beta and estradiol in hormone-responsive experimental breast cancer models. The specific aims are as follows: (1) determine the therapeutic and preventive effects of interferon-alpha (IFN-alpha) and IFN-beta (alone and in combination with estradiol) in experimental mammary tumors and (2) assess the ability of IFN-beta to enhance the response of mammary tumors to chemotherapy and hormone therapy. The long-term objectives of this proposal are to evaluate the therapeutic and preventive potential of IFN-beta in hormone responsive experimental breast cancer and to assess the ability of IFN-beta to enhance the effects of chemotherapy and hormone therapy. The specific aims are as follows: (1) determine the therapeutic and preventive effects of IFN-alpha and IFN-beta (alone and in combination with estradiol) in experimental mammary tumors. (2) assess the ability of IFN-beta to enhance the response of mammary tumors to chemotherapy and hormone therapy. The experimental tumor models of this proposal are the transgenic adenocarcinoma of the mouse prostate (TRAMP) and estrogen-dependent MMTV-LTR-C3(1) murine mammary tumor models. These models will be used to evaluate IFN-beta-induced changes in the growth, progression, metastasis and hormone sensitivity of mammary tumors. The therapeutic effects of IFN-beta will be determined in TRAMP and C3(1) mice bearing primary and metastatic tumors. The preventive effects of IFN-beta will be determined in TRAMP mice using an established approach. The effects of combination IFN-beta/estradiol therapy on the growth and progression of mammary tumors will be evaluated.
