Video Splitter The title says it all. It is a program that will take a list of files from a source and duplicate them to a destination on the same disk or network. For example, it will take all the files on your c disk and split them across to your d disk. It has the same features as the older ViewRipper, but is more simplistic and easier to use. View Ripper is no longer on sale due to the fact that the new program is better than it and is available for free. When you open Video Splitter for the first time, a wizard will be displayed, allowing you to choose the source and destination file locations. You can also set the number of files that will be copied and the number of duplicates that will be created. A summary of how many files are left on the source is also displayed so that you will know how many files you have left to duplicate. Once these settings are done, click on the [Start] button to begin the process. Another interesting feature of Video Splitter is its ability to create a configuration file for use in the future. To do this, simply select [Create Configuration File] from the Tools menu, then name and save your configuration file. The next time you open Video Splitter, it will automatically use this configuration file to perform the task. You can also choose to use the configuration file for the next session by clicking on [Use Configuration File] and saving it. If you need to change your configuration file, simply right-click on the [Save Configuration File] button and choose a different configuration.
