Handlebars.compile multiple templates I've got two templates and I need them to be rendered in one template. I currently have this: `Handlebars.registerHelper( "compiled", function(options,`

```
context) { var data = context.data; if (data.type === 'compiled-template') { var templateName =
data.templateName; if (options.fn) { var result = options.fn(templateName);
return result; } else { return templateName; } } }); That's how I'm calling the helper.
When i compile the second template, it's getting the

templateName in the function and returning the compiled template. I've got two ideas I could use the compiled template to store the data to be sent to the first template and then returning a compiled template with data, but I don't know how I'd do that in one single helper. Is there a way for that? A: I've found a workaround for this. Instead of returning the template with the correct data, I just replace the data in the template before returning it. I've got this var data = context.data; if (data.type === 'compiled-template') { var templateName = data.templateName; if (options.fn) { var result = options.fn(templateName); Handlebars.VM.Template.prototype.update(templateName, result);
