which characterizes this work. An original musical pilgrimage, which is like a breath of fresh air, to those who like to travel to the unknown. Cecil Jackson: Clarinet Concerto. First Responder. The concerto has a profound social message: the peaceful return to the community from the terrifying metamorphosis of a rampant, deadly disease. This work has an irrefutable message: the ability to confront and conquer uncertainty. Laura Perico: Dvora. The work is based on a Croatian

Various notes on the life and music of the composer Bela Kovacs, born in Budapest in 1960, who died on the Isle of Skye in 2011 at the age of 63. I knew about him through his music, since much of it was available online. This is an enjoyable, often amusing, informative read with many other ways in which Kovacs touched the lives of ordinary people, as well as those of his musicians and the company he worked in. There are at least eight people mentioned in the book, those most important being his wife Janette, who has the title role. Her story, and that of her sister Inge, who appears to have known Kovacs better, are told in the first section, which gives a taste of Kovacs's busy social life, marked by fluctuating fortunes and absences, and his excessive optimism and capacity for friendship. The two sisters always went along with his plans and adventures. Kovacs's mother, Adele, even joined the family on holiday. Kovacs describes himself as a “mongrel Hungarian of Russian extraction,” adding that he was brought up in France and that “as a child, I felt more at home in Paris than Budapest.” He grew up not enjoying the company of his mother, and his natural father, László Hosszú, whom he calls “László Andrós,” died when he was very young. He clearly felt deprived of the security he needed and wanted, and a lack of male figures in his life probably explained his need to go into male company as an adult. Kovacs's first training as a musician was on the piano, and he played in his teacher's chamber group. He studied music at the Hungarian Academy of Music, then at the École Normale de Musique in Paris, where he was immediately recognized by Pierre Boulez for his talent and given a well-earned solo position. Kovacs's first published composition, Tango for 22 Improvisers, was recorded on record
