Personal Degradation of β -amyloid-like peptides by marine enzymes and identification of new compounds affecting β -amyloid aggregation. Targeting amyloid- β (A β) with anti-aggregation inhibitors is a viable strategy for Alzheimer's disease (AD) therapies. However, the presence of a multitude of amyloid species has made it difficult to identify inhibitors for a specific monomeric form of A β . In this study, we explored the degradation of β -amyloid-like peptides (A β LPs) by both marine and terrestrial enzymes using mass spectrometry-based approaches. The bacterial strain Microbulbifer thermotolerans, an identified bacterium living in coastal seawater, showed promise for degrading β -amyloid from A β (1-40) and A β (1-3da54e8ca3
