Description: Dynamic Disk

Converter is a simple utility that converts existing dynamic disk drives. On Windows, you can choose to recover the original disk or to copy a selected folder or document or a file. Dynamic Disk Converter can convert from a dynamic disk drive to a regular file. To do so, you need to specify the folder in which the resulting files will be saved. You can select several folders by simply pressing the Enter key. After that an Explorer window will appear with the folder you have selected. To save the file, you need to press the Enter key. As soon as you press the Enter key, you will see that the file you selected has been moved to the My Documents folder. When you save a file to the program, you need to specify a file name. To save multiple files, simply select the desired folder and press the Enter key. Pressing the Enter key will save the files. After selecting the desired file, press the Enter key. Files in the current folder are color coded as: Folder containing files - color of the folder text. - folder with files - color of the folder text + - a folder with files - color of the folder text + - folder with files inside the selected folder - color of the folder text - + - None folder - folder text color. Pressing the Esc key will save files and close the window. For file selection you can use standard MS-DOS methods.

But they are not always convenient.
This program has features that MS-DOS does not have (e.g. working with archives). The utility is a handy tool for creating, viewing and editing database files. It can also be used as an external editor for DB files. To work with database files built-in dBaseII editor is used. When you call it from the DOS command line, the name of the database is specified as a parameter, and the editor program is called with the F2 or F5 key. Example: F5 dBase II. F10 dBase IV F10 dBase

IV. The following data is used in the example table: Table 1. Table 2.

When data is entered in the F5 dBase II table its contents are displayed on the screen using a program. A DOS program is used for this purpose. The program loads the table and builds a dialog box.

The following functions are used in the program: - for data input -

DB_READ; - DB_WRITE is used to display and print the table; - to go to a new row of a table entry - DB_RECORD_PAGE; - to delete a record from the table - DB_DELETE; - to search for a desired table record - DB_FIND_RECORD. There is a corresponding button on the ribbon for each of these actions in Designer mode. As the table is being edited, messages about the actions performed will constantly appear in the database window. For each message there is a button, by activating it, you can read the description of the performed actions. To view all messages, click on the database window header.
