Benefits of adherence to dietary recommendations during the early postpartum period for prevention of hypertension, gestational diabetes, and obesity: a systematic review. Postpartum hypertension, gestational diabetes mellitus (GDM), and obesity are associated with adverse cardiovascular health outcomes. Accordingly, we examined whether adherence to postpartum dietary recommendations could reduce the risk for these adverse events. We performed a systematic review in MEDLINE and Google Scholar from inception until August 2012. We included randomized controlled trials (RCTs) of postpartum women that included a dietary intervention group and a control group, reported prevalence of postpartum hypertension, GDM, or obesity or included  $\geq 4$  months of follow-up. Two reviewers independently extracted data. Primary outcomes were as follows: postpartum hypertension (defined as  $\geq 140/90$  mm Hg), GDM, and obesity. For randomized controlled trials (RCTs), we assessed risk of bias using the Cochrane risk of bias tool. When only 2 studies were available per outcome, we identified the most informative studies. For all outcomes, we conducted a meta-analysis of RCTs if at least 2 RCTs provided direct and 2 provided indirect evidence. For nonrandomized studies, we evaluated the quality of evidence using the Newcastle-Ottawa scale and GRADE (Grading of Recommendations Assessment, Development and Evaluation). From 188 articles identified in the systematic review, we included 15 RCTs in the systematic review. Dietary intervention groups had reductions in gestational weight gain (0.7; 95% CI, 0.2-1.3 kg;  $P=0.01$ ), gestational blood pressure (systolic 0.7 mm Hg; 95% CI, -2.3 to 3.7;  $P=0.62$ ; diastolic 1.3 mm Hg; 95% CI, -0.5 to 2.9;  $P=0.13$ ), and an increase in fruit and vegetable intake (  $f30f4ceada$
