Roblox allows players to design their own video games. All games are presented to other users as if they were real and playable. A player can design their own levels and characters and play them with their friends over the internet. Roblox also features several pre-made game modes, including a sandbox game where users can design their own game levels with their own rules and restrictions, a survival game where players and their character fight against off-screen monsters and players and against each other, and a team-based game where up to four players must work together to fight against an off-screen enemy. The monetization of Roblox revolves around in-game purchases known as "Experience Points" and microtransactions. Robux, Roblox's virtual currency, can be purchased with real world money. Robux can be spent in different ways: in-game purchases, buying Community Moderator items (such as increasing the number of lives that users can have in certain game modes) with Robux, buying premium outfits with Robux, and hosting and supporting player-made games. Robux is Roblox's virtual currency, and it is used in place of real money. Robux is used to purchase additional game content and game services from Roblox and to directly buy in-game items. Roblox allows for in-game purchases using Robux, which are handled by the Roblox company itself. Roblox has different types of in-game purchases, including the ability to pay with the game's real-world currency, the Robux. Roblox allows players to buy in-game items and services from the Roblox store by using their Robux account. The Robux API also allows developers to integrate Roblox-based purchases into their own games. Roblox has been ranked as the 113th most valuable startup by Forbes, and in 2018, Roblox had 65 million monthly users, of which 38 million were children aged 14 or younger and 6 million were aged 13 or younger. It is one of the most-visited websites among children and teenagers, averaging 1.2 billion monthly visits in 2018. Roblox is also commonly viewed by adults and teenagers, with more than one billion monthly visits in 2018. Roblox games have been played online by more than one billion people in the last year, accounting for over 17% of the total number of players. Roblox is available on Windows, macOS, iOS, and Android.
